Will robots be the teachers of the future? The general consensus is that technology will never fully replace teachers in the classroom. However, with the rapid advancements being made in artificial intelligence (AI) and the groundbreaking research being conducted in this area, learning for both children and adults is set to undergo nothing short of a revolution. The Future of Learning is a comprehensive and contemporary examination of the maturity of digital teaching and learning. This is an invaluable resource from administration to classroom providing new insight into innovation in the education technology practice.

The 4th International Conference on Future Learning (ICFL 2023) will be held in Guangzhou, China during November 3-5, 2023. It aims to be the premier international forum for researchers, practitioners and industry specialists to discuss and explore the latest trends, innovations, and research that could fundamentally alter teaching and learning. ICFL 2023 will feature invited speeches, paper presentations, and social networking events. It welcomes submission of abstracts and research papers concerning any branch of Future Learning and participation of anyone who are interested in the related fields.
